A WALK THROUGH MILLENNIUMS

WHEN THE ANCIENT CITY TELLS ITS STORY

For the grandeur and beauty of its monuments, in the first century BC Cicero described Syracuse as “the largest and most beautiful of the Greek cities”. The reasons behind this praise can be discovered simply by walking alongside the ruins of a story that never stops to inspire us.

Visiting the park, we immerse ourselves in a space where the protagonist is not only archaeology but a unique landscape in the world: Antiquity lives together with the flourishing vegetation of the Latomie and the millenary traditions of the city.

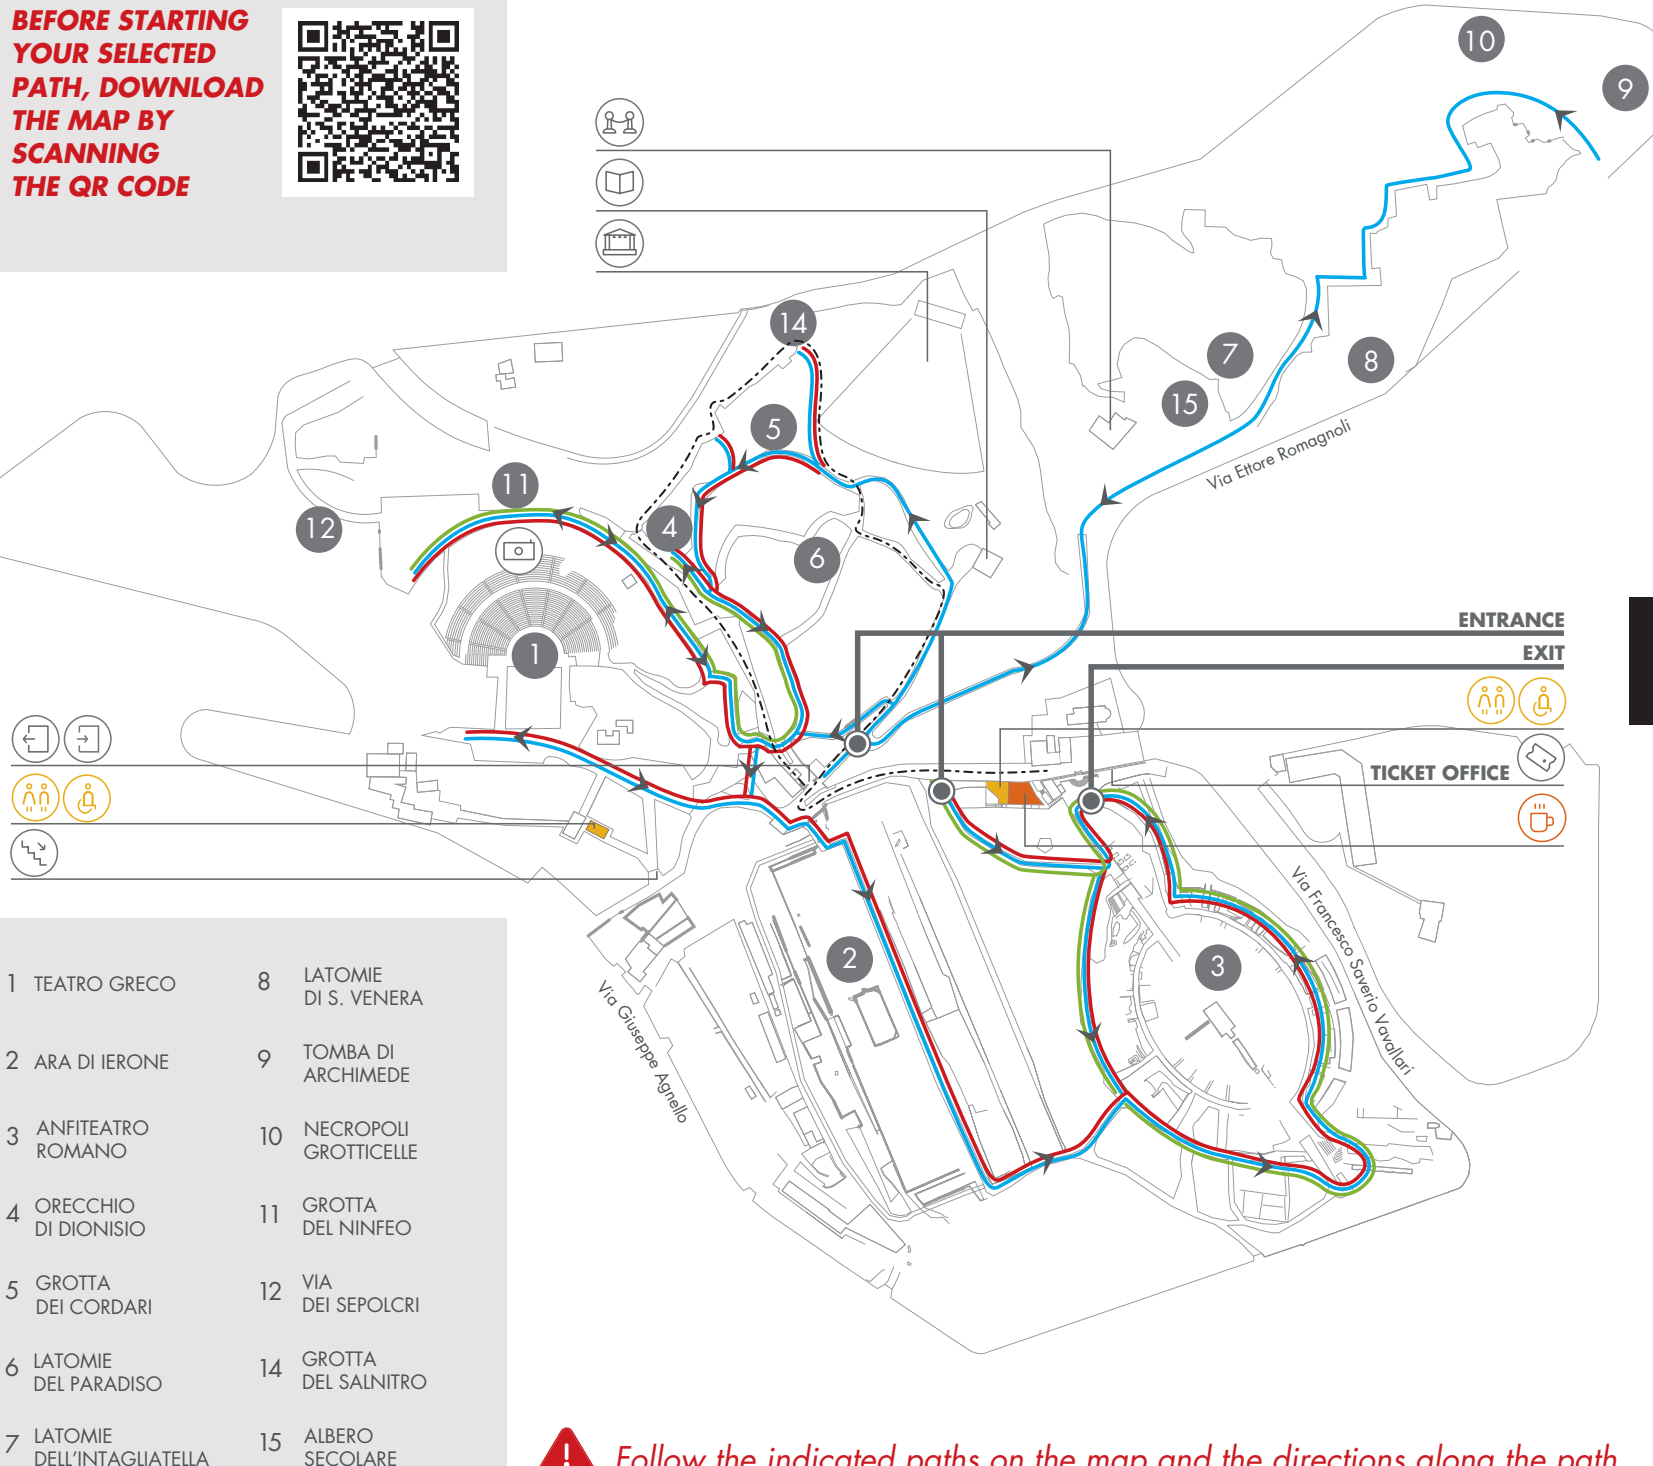

Rita Insolia
Interim Director of the Archaeological Park of Neapolis

The archaeological area covers 240,000 square meters. It was born at the end of a complex restoration work begun in the middle of the last century which allowed the monuments to be freed from excessive overlapping and to enhance the surrounding landscape. It includes the monumental part of the ancient city and a dense series of testimonies from the protohistoric age to the late antiquity.

The ancient district of Neapolis occupies a large strip of the southern slopes of the Epipoli plateau and has as its focal point a hill that takes the name of Temenite, from the Greek témenos (sacred corral), because in the Archaic Greek period there was a sanctuary dedicated to Apollo.

A SPECTACULAR THEATRE

— TEATRO GRECO

Carved into the living rock and framed by a panorama that connects the sea and the sky, the Greek Theatre is one of the most impressive and renowned buildings in the Ancient world. Sources date its birth to the V century BC, and here is where in 476 BC Aeschylus staged

“The Aitnans”. In the third century BC, under Hieron II, the Theatre was renewed and transformed into the current shape. The cavea had a diameter of 138,6 metres, one of the largest in the Greek world, and originally included 67 tiers. The scenery had to be very great. In the summer it hosts an important play review of ancient theatre.

WONDERS UNDER THE SKY

— ANFITEATRO ROMANO

Probably built in the I century BC, it's second only to the Verona Arena for its sizes. Except for the south side, it is excavated out of the living rock and has an elliptical form. A complex system of steps and corridors allows the access to the various levels. The steps were covered by marble slabs.

— ARA DI IERONE

Dedicated to Zeus Eleutherios, it's the largest altar known in the ancient world and one of the most important monuments desired by Hieron II, in the III century BC. Today you can see the base carved in the rock.

— GROTTA DEL NINFEO

Monumental fountain where the water deriving from a big Greek aqueduct pours out from a cavity. It was part of the Mouseion, seat of the artistic guild.

TALES OF ROCKS

ORECCHIO DI DIONISIO

Artificial cave with a characteristic sinuous shape which ends on the top with a pointed arch. It has particularly acoustics ability and this gave it the name of "the cave that speaks". The name is due to Caravaggio who, during a visit in Syracuse in 1608, endorsed the legend of the tyrant who overheard the speeches of prisoners amplified by the echo.

GROTTA DEI CORDARI

During the Greek period it was a rock quarry, but from the XVII century and right up until the '70s of the last century it was used to produce ropes. The moisture guaranteed the ropes a high elasticity and resistance.

LATOMIA DEL PARADISO

One of the quarries from which limestone was extracted in ancient times. It is the largest and most scenic of the quarries, and enchants with its lush vegetation of cedars, capers, oranges and prickly pears. The paradisiacal environment (in Greek paradeisos means garden) gave the quarry its name.

PISCINA ROMANA

Carved in the rock and divided from pillars in three isles, it is located beneath the Church of S. Nicolò dei Cordari of the Norman period. Considered the water reservoir for the Roman Amphitheatre, recently it has been interpreted as a granary.
